The grunts came closer and a great yellow and black head came round the door followed by the rest of the body. It was not a tiger or a lion but a leopard. Supposedly the most vicious of the great cats. We nearly fell off the ledge in fright at the sheer size of it. My mouth went dry as the great beast lifted its head and looked at the small mortals perched on the ledge. It gave a roar and sniffed the air. Our store - room was not a very large place and the animal took up nearly of it. Just that I was thinking that it had no hostile intentions towards us, it roared and leapt up at us. Had the ledge been just a foot lower, the leopard would have had us for dinner that night. My sister screamed and so did I. I'm not ashamed of admitting it.
